Our logo

Columbia University's most identifiable visual mark is the crown, which it has employed in some form since its founding, in 1754. As part of the university, the Law School continues to use a version of the crown as well. In 2017, we refreshed our logo to emphasize our connection with the tradition and prestige of the university, while modernizing the typography to call attention to the Law School's impact in the world and our bold ambitions for the future.

LOGO OPTIONS

There are two versions of the logo: stacked and single line. Both are available in Columbia Law blue, black, and white, in versions optimized for print and web use.

The crown and the type should always be used together. This lockup may not be altered in any way. Examples of logo dos and don'ts follow, on page 4.

Logos can be downloaded at law.columbia.edu/communications/ visual-style/logo.

Logo usage

Consistent, ordered use of the logo will reinforce our clear brand identity.

CLEAR SPACE AROUND THE LOGO

It is important that no other logos, type, or graphic elements intersect space immediately surrounding the logo. The logo should have room to breathe in relation to other elements on the page.

The amount of clear space on each side of the logo should be at least the size of the upper case "L" in "Law."

MINIMUM SIZE OF LOGO

In order to maintain legibility, both versions of the logo have minimum sizes at which they can be used.

The horizontal logo should be used no smaller than 3/18 inches (.1875") tall.

The stacked logo should be used no smaller than 9/16 inches (.5625") tall.

Our color palette

We are thoughtful, innovative, and strong, and we have chosen our color palette to express that.

CORE COLORS
Our core color palette is built around Columbia Law blue, a blue that links us closely to the the university and that we have consistently used. Columbia Law blue along with two additional shades of blue and gold are our core colors.
To create a unified look and feel, these core colors should be used more often than the other colors in our palette.
SECONDARY COLORS
A supportive palette of secondary colors accompanies our core colors.
Use secondary colors occasionally to create emphasis or differentiation.
These colors can be used for color fields, graphic elements, and accents.

NEUTRALS
These shades provide flexibility when working with backgrounds, layout, and information hierarchy, without being overpowering.

Photography

Use photography that shows our community engaged and active in discussion, study, or academics.

The Columbia campus is surrounded by parks and a vibrant community, with the rest of the city at our feet. Use photography that gives a sense of place and showcases our beautiful campus and architecture. We have students and faculty from around the world, and our photography should represent that global viewpoint and diverse community.

Students
If the main subject of a photograph is a person or multiple people, the photo should have a photojournalistic, candid feel: natural smiles, spontaneous moments, real interactions and movements. Avoid overly staged photography whenever possible.

Faculty, staff, and alumni
These photos should be more sophisticated, feeling more like staged portraiture, and, whenever possible, located in an environment rather than against a plain background or wall. Natural light should feel present at all times.

DO...

Use real people from our community.
Only use stock photography when completely necessary, to illustrate a concept.

Be natural, casual, and spontaneous.
Images that are natural will resonate with our audience. Natural light is preferred in all photography.

Focus on a single subject. When taking a photograph of a group, select an individual for your audience to focus on.

Keep clutter out. If the space you are shooting seems complex, choose to focus on particular details of that space.

Pay attention to the details. Keep an eye on what subjects are wearing or holding.

Stay current. Regularly refresh your unit's photo collection to ensure your images are relevant and up-to-date.

AVOID...

Images that are busy, too complicated, out of focus, low resolution, or too dark.

Posed or unnatural images and stock photos.

Nighttime imagery.

Logos and branded packaging (food or beverage containers).

Heavy flash.

Images that look or feel dated.

Stationery

As in the past, orders for business papers should be placed through the secretariat at secretariat@law.columbia.edu. Word templates can be dowloaded at law.columbia.edu/ communications/visual-style/letterhead-template.
BUSINESS CARDS AND LETTERHEAD
You may choose from two options of business cards and letterhead, shown on page 13.

Please note: Since we have made available customizable letterhead templates in Microsoft Word format (see below), we will be issuing only formal printed letterhead with a generic Columbia Law School logo, or with a departmental header for those offices that require it due to large bulk mailings. In addition, we ask that you cease using all previous versions of Columbia Law School letterhead by December 30, 2018, so as to avoid confusion.

Downloadable Templates: For ease of use, we have created customizable Columbia Law School letterhead templates that you can edit in Microsoft Word. Simply download the desired template, fill in your contact information, add the text of the letter, and then print or save it as a PDF. This should help cut down on paper and reduce the inefficiency of printing correspondence on official letterhead and scanning it to produce a digital version to email or upload.
